On the evening of October 27, 2006, Simon True, a 49-year-old miner, was working in the Beaconsfield Gold Mine in Tasmania, Australia, when disaster struck. A massive rockfall caused the mine to collapse, trapping True and his two colleagues, Todd Russell and Brant Webb, hundreds of meters underground.

True found himself trapped in a small, dark chamber, with no food, water, or light. He knew that he had to stay calm and conserve his energy if he wanted to survive. As the hours turned into days, True began to lose hope. He hallucinated, and he began to doubt whether he would ever be rescued.

But True refused to give up. He rationed his water, and he used his flashlight sparingly. He also kept himself occupied by singing songs and reciting poetry. True's determination and resilience paid off. After 59 hours, he was finally rescued by a team of miners.

True's story is a testament to the human spirit's ability to conquer adversity. It is a story of hope, courage, and resilience. 59 Hours is a must-read for anyone who is interested in survival stories or who is simply looking for a story that will inspire them.
