The Nurse Ambulatory Care Board (NACB) is a national organization that certifies nurses who provide care to patients in outpatient settings. The NACB offers two certifications: the Certified Ambulatory Care Nurse (CACN) and the Certified Ambulatory Care Nurse Practitioner (CACNP).

The CACN certification is for nurses who provide care to patients in ambulatory care settings, such as primary care clinics, urgent care centers, and community health centers. The CACNP certification is for nurses who provide advanced nursing care to patients in ambulatory care settings.

To be eligible for the CACN certification, nurses must have a current RN license and at least 2,000 hours of experience in ambulatory care nursing within the past five years. To be eligible for the CACNP certification, nurses must have a current RN license, a master's degree in nursing, and at least 2,000 hours of experience in ambulatory care nursing within the past five years.

The NACB certification exam is a computer-based exam that consists of 150 questions. The exam covers a wide range of topics, including:

- Patient assessment and diagnosis
- Patient management and treatment
- Health promotion and disease prevention
- Pharmacology
- Ethics and legal issues

The NACB exam is a challenging exam, but it is possible to pass with the right preparation. There are a number of resources available to help you prepare for the exam, including:

- The NACB website
- NACB-approved review courses
- Study guides
- Practice exams

If you are planning to take the NACB exam, it is important to start preparing early. The sooner you start studying, the more time you will have to master the material. Here are some tips for preparing for the NACB exam:

- Create a study schedule and stick to it

- Use a variety of study materials
- Take practice exams
- Get plenty of rest and exercise
- Stay positive and motivated

The NACB certification is a valuable credential that can open up new career opportunities for nurses. If you are a nurse who provides care to patients in ambulatory care settings, I encourage you to consider obtaining the NACB certification.
