Summary

"The Dying Citizen" is a poem by Allen Tate that explores the themes of death, loss, and the decline of the American South. The poem is set in the aftermath of the Civil War, and it follows the thoughts and feelings of a dying Confederate soldier.

The poem begins with the soldier lying on a battlefield, surrounded by the dead and dying. He is filled with guilt and remorse for the bloodshed that has occurred, and he wonders why he has been spared. As he lies there, he sees a vision of the future, and he realizes that the South will never be the same. The old order has been destroyed, and a new era is about to begin.

The soldier's vision is filled with images of violence and destruction. He sees the South being burned and pillaged, and he hears the cries of the innocent. He realizes that the war has not only destroyed the lives of countless people, but it has also destroyed the very fabric of the South.

In the end, the soldier dies, and his body is buried in a mass grave. His death is a symbol of the death of the old South, and it marks the beginning of a new era. The poem is a powerful and moving elegy for the lost world of the Confederacy, and it is a reminder of the horrors of war.
