Woods was born in Cypress, California, on December 30, 1975. He began playing golf at the age of two, and by the time he was 12, he had won numerous junior tournaments. In 1991, Woods won the U.S. Junior Amateur Championship, becoming the youngest player to ever win the tournament.

Woods turned professional in 1996, and he quickly became one of the top players in the world. In 1997, he won his first major championship, the Masters Tournament, by 12 strokes. This victory made Woods the youngest player to ever win the Masters, and it was the first of his 15 major championship victories.

Woods' success continued throughout the 1990s and 2000s. He won multiple major championships each year, and he was consistently ranked number one in the world. In 2000, Woods became the first golfer to win four major championships in a row. He also won the Tiger Slam, which is the unofficial term for winning all four major championships in a row.

Woods' dominance of the sport began to decline in the late 2000s. He suffered a number of injuries, and his personal life was plagued by scandal. In 2009, Woods took a break from golf to deal with his personal issues. He returned to the sport in 2010, but he has not been able to regain his former dominance.

Despite his recent struggles, Woods remains one of the most popular and recognizable athletes in the world. He has inspired a generation of golfers, and his legacy will continue to be debated for years to come. He has been a role model for many young people, and he has shown the world that anything is possible if you set your mind to it.

Tiger Woods is a true golfing icon. He has achieved more than any other golfer in history, and he has inspired a generation of golfers. His legacy will continue to be debated for years to come, but there is no doubt that he is one of the greatest athletes of all time.
