- Still-hunting: Still-hunting involves walking slowly and quietly through the woods, looking for squirrels. When you see a squirrel, stop and take a shot.
- Stalking: Stalking involves approaching a squirrel slowly and carefully, trying to get close enough for a shot.
- Calling: Calling involves using a squirrel call to attract squirrels. Once you've attracted a squirrel, you can take a shot.

- Hunting with a dog: Dogs can be helpful for finding and retrieving squirrels.

Here are a few tips and tricks to help you improve your squirrel hunting skills:

- Be patient. Squirrel hunting can be a challenging sport, so don't get discouraged if you don't see any squirrels right away.
- Move slowly and quietly. Squirrels are very skittish, so it's important to move slowly and quietly when you're hunting them.
- Use cover. Stay behind trees and other objects when you're moving through the woods. This will help you stay hidden from squirrels.
- Take your time. When you see a squirrel, take your time and aim carefully before you shoot.
- Field dress your squirrels immediately. Field dressing involves removing the internal organs of the squirrel. This will help the meat stay fresh.

Squirrel hunting is a safe sport, but there are a few things you can do to stay safe:

- Always wear eye and ear protection when you're shooting.
- Be aware of your surroundings and make sure there are no other people in the area before you shoot.
- Never shoot at a squirrel that is in a tree above you.

- Store your firearm unloaded and in a safe place when you're not using it.
